

“The usual practice of the ILO supervisory bodies must be resumed at the earliest possible date,” said Japanese tripartite members

Concerning the right to strike and the supervisory bodies of the ILO, the Japanese tripartite members of the ILO Governing Body shared the following position on 5th February 2015:

Recognising that the right to strike is one of the fundamental workers’ rights that are guaranteed by the Constitution and relevant laws in Japan;

Considering that the right to strike in Japan is protected in practice as well;

Recognising that it is apparent that the right to strike is generally closely related to the right to organise (freedom of association);

The Japanese tripartite members of the ILO Governing Body call their colleagues of the Governing Body to be wise and expedient with the view to resuming the usual practice of the supervisory bodies at the earliest possible date.
