Workers' Alliance against Forced Labour and Trafficking

What is forced labour?

Forced labour is a brutal and inhuman form of exploitation that is inflicted on millions of people around the world, in all regions and in all forms of economic activity. It violates the fundamental human rights of freedom of movement, liberty and dignity, and the right to live free from slavery and forced labour.

Forced labour is a global problem, affecting all countries of the world. More than 40 million people are estimated to be in forced labour worldwide, and an additional 114 million people are at risk of being exploited.

Forced labour is the modern-day form of slavery, with individuals being forced to work against their will and under conditions that are often cruel, inhumane, and degrading.

Forced labour is a form of human rights abuse that affects millions of people around the world, in all regions and in all forms of economic activity. It violates the fundamental human rights of freedom of movement, liberty and dignity, and the right to live free from slavery and forced labour.

Forced labour is a global problem, affecting all countries of the world. More than 40 million people are estimated to be in forced labour worldwide, and an additional 114 million people are at risk of being exploited.

Forced labour is the modern-day form of slavery, with individuals being forced to work against their will and under conditions that are often cruel, inhumane, and degrading.

Forced labour is a form of human rights abuse that affects millions of people around the world, in all regions and in all forms of economic activity. It violates the fundamental human rights of freedom of movement, liberty and dignity, and the right to live free from slavery and forced labour.

Forced labour is a global problem, affecting all countries of the world. More than 40 million people are estimated to be in forced labour worldwide, and an additional 114 million people are at risk of being exploited.
